REAL-TIME WELFARE MONITORING

The Challenge

Beacon Barkers already ran a tight welfare routine - regular checks, close attention to every kennel, a genuine commitment to the guidelines that govern responsible boarding. But a manual check is only ever a snapshot: accurate the moment it's taken, and unverifiable an hour later. As UK summers have brought increasingly severe heatwaves, that gap between 'we checked' and 'we know' became impossible to ignore.

"Dogs can't tell you when they're too hot. As a kennel, that's on us to know — not guess. Kennel Care means we're never relying on a thermometer someone forgot to check three hours ago."
— Darron, Beacon Barkers Pet Centre

"We've always taken the welfare guidelines seriously, but the recent heatwaves made it obvious that 'checking in on the blocks' wasn't good enough anymore. We needed to know, in real time, not find out."
— Darron, Beacon Barkers Pet Centre

The Solution

Beacon Barkers now runs Kennel Care sensors across their entire site - every kennel block individually monitored, with live temperature and humidity readings updating continuously. Related kennels are grouped into area-level blocks, so staff can see at a glance how an entire wing is holding up, not just one sensor at a time. The moment any reading drifts outside the safe range, an instant alert goes straight to the team's phones - no waiting for the next scheduled walk-round. Every reading is logged automatically, building a permanent, time-stamped history that's ready to export the moment it's needed - for an inspector, an assessor or Beacon Barkers' own records.

The Result

When this summer's heatwave put every kennel's welfare standards to the test, Beacon Barkers didn't have to rely on memory or good intentions - they had the data to prove exactly how every block performed, hour by hour, for the entire period.

"We're a responsible kennel first and a business second. Kennel Care gives us the evidence and the guideline compliance to back that up, not just the good intentions," said Darron.
— Darron, Beacon Barkers Pet Centre

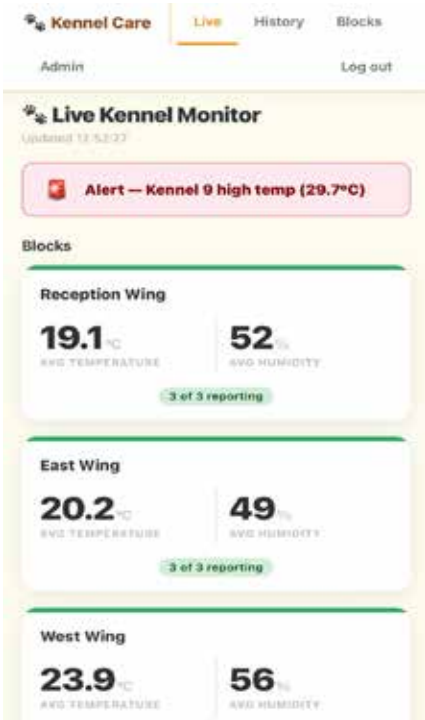

"When we can show real data on how every block was kept within guidelines during last summer's heatwave, that's not marketing - that's proof we did right by every dog in our care."
— Darron, Beacon Barkers Pet Centre
